The aim of this information sheet is to help Queensland not-for-profit groups decide whether an incorporated association or a company limited by guarantee (CLG) is a more suitable incorporated structure for them.

While most Queensland not-for-profit groups choose between incorporating as an incorporated association or as a CLG, these are not the only forms of incorporation available for not-for-profit groups. Please read the related Not-for-profit Law fact sheet: "Which incorporated legal structure should we choose?" for a summary of other legal structures for not-for-profit groups, available on the Legal Structure page.

Introduction

An incorporated association is a type of incorporated legal structure made under the Associations Incorporation Act 1981 (Qld) (QLD IA Act). A company limited by guarantee (CLG) is another type of incorporated legal structure made under the Commonwealth Corporations Act 2001 (Cth). Both are suitable legal structures for not-for-profit groups in Queensland.

Incorporated associations were originally designed to be low cost to register, and more simple to run than a CLG. Recent changes to the laws for both incorporated associations and CLGs registered as charities mean that the arguments for choosing to incorporate as an association over a CLG are no longer as compelling.

For groups that are (or hope to be) registered as a charity, the transition of regulation of CLGs that are registered charities from ASIC to the Australian Charities and Not-for-profits Commission (ACNC) means that the regulatory approach for charity CLGs is now closer to that of an incorporated association. The ACNC aims to take a more educative approach as a regulator – meaning it will be less likely to impose fines for technical breaches of reporting requirements. Some reporting fees formerly required to be paid to ASIC by CLGs are waived by the ACNC for charities.

This guide addresses some key factors that groups should consider when deciding between incorporating as an incorporated association or a CLG. Once you have read the guide and familiarised yourself with your organisation's options, you should seek legal advice from an advisor with experience advising not-for-profit groups. Spending some time (and, if necessary, money) getting professional advice on legal structure issues before you incorporate is a worthwhile investment in the long-term viability of your newly-forming organisation. Choosing the right legal structure can save your group considerable time, money and legal and administrative headaches further down the track!

Issue 1: Where will the group 'operate' or 'carry out activities'?

When choosing between an incorporated association or CLG, it is important to think about where your group plans to operate, both when it starts and in the future.

Where can a Company Limited by Guarantee operate?

A CLG is incorporated under the Commonwealth Corporations Act and can carry out its activities anywhere in Australia.

Where can a Queensland incorporated association operate?

The law relating to incorporated associations is state-based, and each state and territory in Australia has its own laws. A group incorporated as an association under the Queensland QLD IA Act can operate anywhere in Queensland. However, it cannot substantially operate in other states without taking further legal steps (discussed below).

Holding one-off or occasional activities in another state (such as a conference) would not count as 'operating', but carrying on more regular or substantial activities might.

If you incorporate as a Queensland incorporated association and want to legally operate in other states, you will need to consider the options summarised below. As appropriate, you should decide whether any of the options could work for your organisation, or whether you should incorporate as a CLG from the beginning.

Options for Queensland incorporated associations to operate outside of Queensland

If your group incorporates as a Queensland incorporated association, but wants to operate (undertake more than one-off or occasional activities) outside Queensland, there are two options available to enable it to do so legally. Both of these options may have costs involved and increased administration for your organisation. It is also possible for an incorporated association to convert to a CLG if necessary (discussed further below).

For more detailed descriptions of the processes described below, go to the Not-for-profit Law fact sheet, Changing your organisation's structure, on our Information Hub at www.nfplaw.org.au/changingstructure.

Option A – register the group as a Registered Australian Body (RAB) with ASIC

This is the option most commonly recommended (that is, rather than option B below or converting to a CLG). This will mean that your group will be regulated by the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC) as well as to the Queensland Office of Fair Trading (OFT) and that extra forms will need to be prepared and lodged by your organisation each year and when certain changes occur. Your group must also display additional information along with its name. Groups that register as RABs that are also charities apply to ASIC to become an RAB but then report to the ACNC where they would otherwise report to ASIC (and continue to report to the OFT as usual).

Option B – set up separate incorporated associations in each state or territory you wish to operate in

This is sometimes known as a ‘federated structure’. This may be appropriate for your group if there are distinct groups involved in each state and territory that address distinct state-specific issues, which can be very difficult to administer for a single group (especially if there are more than two separate associations required). Each incorporated association will be a separate legal entity and will need to comply with the requirements of that state or territory’s legislation (including having a separate committee of management, financial records and reporting, etc). In addition, any tax concessions enjoyed by one such separately incorporated association (eg. income tax exemption and deductible gift endorsement) cannot be transferred to or shared by any of the other sister/brother associations in another state. Instead, each association will need to seek and maintain its own tax concessions.

CAUTION

Incorporation in multiple states and territories can be difficult to manage and you may end up having to comply with eight different state and territory laws and report to eight different regulators!

Converting to a company limited by guarantee structure

If you incorporate as an incorporated association, and the circumstances of your organisation change (for example you expand from operating just in Queensland, to operating across Australia) your group can ‘convert’ or ‘migrate’ from an incorporated association to a CLG, or if the group is an indigenous one, it can transfer its registration to being under the Commonwealth Corporations (Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander) Act 2006.

Converting from an incorporated association to a CLG does not affect the identity of the organisation. Any contracts or agreements that the association had will continue to have effect after the association’s transfer to a company. However, there are significant costs and administrative processes involved in converting your organisation’s incorporated structure, so this approach should be avoided if possible.

For more information, go to the Not-for-profit Law fact sheet, Changing your organisation’s structure, on our Information Hub at www.nfplaw.org.au/changingstructure.

TIP

Although converting to a company limited by guarantee is an option, it has some significant legal and administrative requirements which can be costly and time consuming. We recommend that you seek legal advice about what is involved for your particular organisation, especially if your organisation has a large membership base.

Issue 2: Will the organisation seek to become registered as a charity?

If your organisation intends to register as a charity, or is already registered, this significantly affects the choice to be made about the best legal structure for your group.

The ACNC was established in 2013. Prior to this, the differences between incorporating as a CLG and incorporating as an incorporated association were much greater for charities. The analysis about which structure best suits your group now depends significantly on whether it intends to register as a charity or not.

This is because if an organisation incorporates as a CLG and is a charity, its main regulator becomes the ACNC rather than ASIC (although applications for incorporation will still be made to ASIC, and applications for Commonwealth tax concessions are still decided by the Australian Taxation Office). Further, different and less complex laws apply to CLGs that are charities than to other CLGs, because when a CLG becomes registered as a charity, most Corporations Act requirements 'switch off'. A good example are the Governance Standards for charities, which provide a flexible framework around holding meetings, accountability and other matters. The Corporation Act requirements for non-charitable CLGs are much more complex and prescriptive.

If your organisation is an incorporated association that is registered as a charity, it will need to report to the ACNC and continue to report to the OFT.

Altogether, the new landscape for charities means that for groups that intend to be registered charities, the CLG structure is often the simplest to administer, and an attractive structure choice.

Finally, the ACNC aims to take an educative regulatory approach, meaning it will use a range of measures to help organisations comply with their legal obligations, rather than taking a strict approach (as is generally taken by ASIC, which regularly issues fines for failing to meet reporting deadlines). This also removes the previous concern organisations had about incorporating as CLGs and meeting ASIC's strictly-enforced requirements.

If your organisation incorporates as a CLG but is not a registered charity (or loses its charitable registration), it will be regulated by ASIC, and will be subject to ASIC's stringent regulatory approach, and the full suite of legal requirements for CLGs under the Corporations Act.

TIP

The ACNC has published a template constitution for charitable CLGs. To read the template see the ACNC website.

Issue 3: Will the organisation have capacity to pay fees?

The amount of money your group has to pay, both in initial and ongoing fees, may be a factor in determining whether an incorporated association or CLG is the best structure for your group.

In general, ASIC charges higher fees to CLGs than the OFT charges incorporated associations, and your group will need to be realistic about the resources it has (or is going to have), and how organised it is going to be about keeping information up to date and paying fees on time (to avoid late fees – which are significant for CLGs). In general, the ACNC does not charge fees for charities when lodging forms and submitting notifications.

Groups that are charities and registered as CLGs will largely report to the ACNC, not ASIC (although CLGs still incorporate with ASIC), and the ACNC does not charge fees for lodging reporting and notifications. The ACNC can charge late fees where charities do not lodge information within required timeframes. For charities, the difference in fees between incorporated associations and CLGs is far less significant. Incorporated associations that are charities will continue to report to the OFT (and pay the required fees to the OFT) and must also report to the ACNC.

Initial application fee

The initial application fee for incorporation as a CLG is higher than for an incorporated association (see the incorporation and ongoing fees table below). However, there are significantly lower fees for not-for-profit CLGs that meet the requirements of a ‘special purpose company’.

Note for charities: Many charities will meet the definition of ‘special purpose company’ and access the lower incorporation fee if:

- they are formed for charitable purposes
- have non-profit and non-distribution clauses in their constitutions, and
- have certain rules relating to directors.

For more information about special purpose companies, go to ASIC’s resource:

<http://asic.gov.au/for-business/starting-a-company/how-to-start-a-company/special-purpose-companies>

Penalties and late fees

The 'late fees' for not complying with legal requirements (for example to lodge documents or pay fees etc) are higher for a CLG than for an incorporated association.

ASIC, the regulator of non-charitable CLGs, imposes penalties for late reporting and is rigorous in its collection of late fees. If your group is late lodging documents, ASIC late fees can quickly accumulate. Late fees may be payable in some circumstances by incorporated associations to the OFT.

A comparison of the main fees payable by each structure is set out on the next page. Fees listed are for the 2015/2016 year and are indexed (go up) each year.

Note for charities: there are late fees for charities reporting to the ACNC so charities need to understand and meet the reporting and notification requirements of the ACNC. CLGs registered as charities will no longer undertake financial reporting to ASIC, and therefore the ASIC fees listed below do not apply.

TIP

Remember that some organisations may be required to have audited accounts because of another requirement (eg. because this is in a funding agreement with the government, or because the members/committee of management believe it is good practice) even though it is not required by the Corporation Act (for companies) or the AI Act (for associations) or the ACNC.

	requirements under another Act, the accounts will need to be audited by an auditor or accountant.
Annual fee when lodging financial statement	$49.95	There is no fee to lodge financial statements with ASIC. However annual review fees are payable as follows: $1,161 ($8,891 advance payment for 10 years), or $46 ($347 advance payment for 10 years) for 'special purpose companies' (companies formed for 'charitable purposes', have non-profit and non-distribution clauses in their constitution and certain rules relating to directors)	There is no fee to lodge financial reporting statements with the ACNC. Incorporated associations that are registered as charities and categorized as medium or large need to lodge with both the OFT (including a fee) and ACNC (no fee). Medium and large CLGs registered as charities only need to lodge financial reporting to ACNC (no fee).
Late fees when lodging annual statement	None	Late lodgement fees will apply if financial statements are not lodged within 4 months of the end of the relevant financial year. Late payment of the annual review will incur late fees as follows: $75 if payment is received within 1 month after the due date $312 if payment is received more than 1 month after the due date	The ACNC may charge late fees both to incorporated associations and CLGs that are registered as charities.
Lodge details of changes to information (eg. address, names of officers)*	None, except for change of name, which incurs a fee of $70.90	None, except for change of name, for which a $382 fee applies.	The ACNC does not charge to change details.
Lodge changes to constitution/rules*	$18.85	None	The ACNC does not charge to change details.
Failure to lodge changes of details within required period (ie. address, names of officers, change to rules/constitution)	None	Fees are as follows: $75.00-first month late, and $312.00 for more than one month late.	The ACNC may charge late fees.

If you choose to be a company and are not a registered charity, your organisation will be regulated by ASIC, a body that is systematic in imposing late fines and is inflexible in relation to waiving fines. If you forget or are late or did not realise that you had to file documents or notify ASIC of certain changes, ASIC late fees can quickly accumulate. The ACNC that regulates CLG charities is likely to take a more educative approach to regulation.

Issue 4: Annual reporting, audits and reviews

Generally speaking, the regime for incorporated associations under the AI Act is more straightforward than the regime for CLGs under the Commonwealth Corporations Act.

If you wish to incorporate as a CLG that is not a registered charity, your group will need ongoing help from a person who has a good understanding of running a company, or access to professional legal or accounting advice.

However, as discussed under Issue 2, CLGs that are registered as charities have different and less complex obligations under the Australian Charities and Not-for-profit Commission Act 2012 (Cth) (ACNC Act), and reporting fees are also lower (waived entirely in many cases). Therefore, concerns about the complexity of the Corporations Act and reporting to ASIC are not as relevant to groups who are or will be charities.

Some incorporated associations and CLGs must have their accounts independently audited or reviewed each year. For both incorporated associations and CLGs, the type of audit or review required will depend on which of three 'tiers' your organisation falls into. Under both structures, only larger organisations (as well as CLGs of any size with Deductible Gift Recipient (DGR) status) need to fully audit their accounts. However keep in mind, many organisations may need to undertake audits for other reasons beyond their size, including being required to do so under a funding agreement.

An independent audit may cost between $2,000 and $20,000+, depending on the size of your group. Therefore the requirement for audited accounts needs to be considered carefully.

TIP

Many organisations may need to undertake audits for other reasons as well, including being required to do so under a funding agreement.

Reporting tiers for CLGs

There are three categories or 'tiers' of CLG based on the organisation's annual revenue. Each tier has different reporting and auditing requirements. The table below briefly sets out the tiers and the corresponding requirements for financial reporting and auditing under the Corporations Act.

	Definition of CLG category	Reporting/auditing requirements
Tier 1 (known as "small CLGs")	CLGs with annual revenue less than $250,000; no DGR status.	Not required to prepare financial report, director's report, or have accounts audited or reviewed unless required to do so under ASIC direction or members' direction (any group of members that make up at least 5% of members can direct the CLG to prepare a financial statement or director's report and can require either a review or audit).
Tier 2	CLGs with annual revenue between $250,000 and $1 million and no DGR status; or annual revenue less than $1 million and DGR status.	Must prepare financial report and have report 'reviewed'. This is not as comprehensive or expensive as a full audit (however CLGs can choose to have report 'audited' nonetheless). Must also prepare a director's report.
Tier 3	Annual revenue over $1 million, whether DGR or not.	Must have accounts fully audited by a qualified company auditor and must also prepare a director's report.

Note for charities: The same tiers apply under the ACNC Act, and similar reporting requirements apply, with financial reports submitted to the ACNC rather than ASIC. Note that for registered charities, in contrast to CLGs regulated by ASIC, being endorsed as a DGR will not trigger higher tier reporting requirements.

Tiers for Queensland incorporated associations

For Queensland incorporated associations, there are also three categories or 'tiers' with different reporting and auditing requirements. The table below briefly sets out the tiers and corresponding requirements for financial reporting and auditing under the AI Act.

	Definition of IA category	Reporting/auditing requirements
Level 3	Incorporated associations that have both: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> current assets of less than the amount prescribed under a regulation or, if no amount is prescribed, less than $20,000, and total revenue of less than the amount prescribed under a regulation or, if no amount is prescribed, less than $20,000. 	A financial statement must be prepared for the reportable financial year within 6 months of the end of the financial year. There is no requirement for the accounts to be audited or reviewed, however the association's president or treasurer must prepare a signed statement stating that the association keeps financial records in a way that properly records the association's income and expenditure and dealings with its assets and liabilities. The financial statement and the statement of the president or treasurer must be presented to the association's general meeting for adoption, then lodged with the chief executive within 1 month of being presented to the general meeting, along with a return in the approved form and the applicable fee.

Level 2	An incorporated association that is not a Level 1 or a Level 3 incorporated association.	A financial statement must be prepared for the reportable financial year within 6 months of the end of the financial year. There is no requirement for the accounts to be audited, however an auditor, accountant or approved person, who must prepare a signed statement stating that they have: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • sighted the association's financial records, and • the association's financial records show that the association has bookkeeping processes in place to adequately record its income and expenditure and dealings with its assets and liabilities. The financial statement and the statement from the person who reviewed the accounts must be presented to the association's general meeting for adoption, then lodged with the chief executive within 1 month of being presented to the general meeting, along with a return in the approved form and the applicable fee.
Level 1	Incorporated associations that have either: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • current assets of more than the amount prescribed under a regulation or, if no amount is prescribed, more than $100,000, or • total revenue of more than the amount prescribed under a regulation or, if no amount is prescribed, more than $100,000. 	A financial statement must be prepared for the reportable financial year within 6 months of the end of the financial year. The financial statement must be audited by an auditor or accountant. The financial statement and signed audit report must be presented to the association's general meeting for adoption, then lodged with the chief executive within 1 month of being presented to the general meeting along with a return in the approved form and the applicable fee.

Note for charities: the same tiers apply under the ACNC Act as under the Corporations Act, and similar reporting requirements apply for charitable CLGs, however reports are submitted to the ACNC rather than ASIC. Incorporated associations registered as charities will need to report to the OFT and report to the ACNC.

TIP

Remember that some organisations may be required to have audited accounts because of another requirement (eg. because this is in a funding agreement with the government, or because the members/committee of management believe it is good practice) even though it is not required by the Corporation Act (for companies) or the AI Act (for associations) or the ACNC Act.

Issue 5: Other factors for your group to consider

The issues discussed above (where your group is going to operate, the skills or expertise available to your group, whether your group will be a registered charity, and its financial capacity) are four of the main factors for groups to consider when choosing their legal structure.

However, there are some other important factors that may affect your group's decision whether to incorporate as an incorporated association or CLG. The table below lists a number of factors which may be relevant to your group's aims, activities or circumstances.

Feature	Brief description
Flexibility of rules or constitution	The Corporations Act provides some flexibility in a company's constitution, and ASIC is unlikely to reject a proposed constitution. Changes to the constitution of a CLG take effect from the date passed by the members (unless otherwise set out). Flexibility is even greater if your CLG is registered as a charity (and therefore reports to the ACNC). The requirements for rules under the QLD AI Act are relatively straightforward. The OFT has listed each of the matters that must be included in an association's own rules and a reference to where these matters are provided for in the Model Rules (see Appendix to Form – Application for incorporation of association). Changes to an association's rules must be by special resolution or according to the rules. The amendment must be notified to the OFT (Chief Executive) with supporting documentation (and fee) within three month of passing the special resolution). On registration of the amendment (by the OFT), the change comes into effect.
Directors (board member) and office holder duties	The potential liabilities of CLG board members are more serious under the Corporations Act than for committee members and other office holders of an incorporated association. There are significant penalties for directors of CLGs who breach their duties. CLGs registered with the ACNC are required to comply with the ACNC governance standards instead of the civil directors' duties under the Corporations Act, however, criminal penalty provisions will still apply (but are rarely imposed). Incorporated associations have office holders' duties set out in legislation, however, the penalties for breaching the duties are lower than those for directors of a CLG. The common law (i.e. judge-made) duties and liabilities of board members are similar for both structures. For more information about the duties of board and committee members, see Not-for-profit Law's Information Hub page on governance at www.nfplaw.org.au/governance.
Number of members	Groups wanting to incorporate as a CLG only need one member. This may suit a not-for-profit organisation wanting to retain a higher degree of control (but remember, this type of company still needs 3 directors) or, where the organisation is to be a subsidiary of another organisation. In contrast, Queensland incorporated associations must have a minimum of seven members. In general, members will have voting rights and be able to call meetings and exercise some control in the organisation (for example, to remove committee of management members).
Speed of incorporation	In general, ASIC often approves an application for incorporation of a CLG

	within 24-48 hours of paperwork being filed online (but if it includes applying for a licence to omit the word 'limited' from the name of the organisation, it will take longer). In contrast, the OFT usually takes 3-4 weeks to process an application for incorporation of an association, particularly where the organisation submits its own rules, rather than using the 'model' rules contained in the Regulations.
Rights of members	CLGs are entitled to appoint a member or a non-member as a proxy (a person to vote at meetings on their behalf). Also, for CLGs not registered as a charity, a small percentage of members' are able to force a members meeting to be called (members with at least 5% of the votes that may be cast at a general meeting may call and hold a general meeting, but must meet procedural requirements and pay any expenses). There are no similar mandatory requirements for Queensland incorporated associations. For associations, the rights and liabilities of members - for example, the rights of members to vote and call meetings - must be written into the association's rules.
Legislation requiring a particular form of incorporation	In limited circumstances, there are laws that require organisations that are undertaking specific activities to adopt a particular legal structure. Your organisation should seek advice about any laws that might apply to the field you are working in.
Availability of information about the organisation to the public	In a CLG, the name, date and place of birth of each director must be provided to ASIC and these details are available to the public (for a small fee). Further, a company is required to keep a register containing the details of members of the organisation, and is required to make this available to all members for free, and to the public for a fee. For an incorporated association, details of the President, Treasurer and Secretary need to be provided to the OFT. An association must keep a register of members' details and make it available to members of the organisation, with a few exceptions. There are certain details available about registered charities (both incorporated associations and CLGs) on the ACNC Register (the register of charities maintained by the ACNC) - eg governing rules, names of directors, annual statements etc.
Flexibility for amalgamation	The Corporations Act does not have a similar provision for amalgamation and therefore usually requires that either one or both amalgamating entities to wind up their existence (with the possibility of termination of employment etc) and then incorporate a new amalgamated company. The QLD AI Act makes provision for one incorporated association to amalgamate with another, with all of the assets, liabilities and staff automatically transferred across to the amalgamated association without the need for winding up or termination of employment. For more information see the Amalgamation and Mergers page of the Information Hub at www.nfplaw.org.au/almagamationmergers.
Operating overseas	If your group wants to operate overseas it will need to seek legal advice about what the laws of the relevant country might require. Using Australia as an example, any overseas (foreign) company that wants to 'carry on business' (conduct activities) in any part of Australia must register with ASIC under our Corporations Act. Many other countries will have similar requirements, even if your group is operating as a not-for-profit. As a general comment, a CLG structure will be a more readily understood and recognised legal structure in other countries, compared with other structures such as an incorporated association.

Conclusion

As highlighted in this guide, a number of factors will influence a group's decision about whether to become an incorporated association or a CLG. There is no quick and easy answer, but weighing up the various factors will help you to determine which structure best suits the activities, circumstances, direction and resources of your particular group.

It is important to remember that as a result of recent changes in the law at both state and federal levels, as well as changes to the regulation of charities by the ACNC, this analysis will continue to change.
